I'll run all the people that request to attend by you, Gene, before saying no.

Unless you tell me otherwise about a particular person, I'll indicate that the room holds 50 people so space is limited and we cannot currently accommodate additional participants... and that we will be better able to evaluate the space for additional attendees as it gets closer to the date. Sound fine?

it occurs to me that we maybe should just be telling people that we just have 50 seats and a lot of panelists and that, for now, we're booked up. but we hope it might change ... [but you ought to run the requests by me too].

His office manager just responded to the invitation we sent out today that YES he does plan to attend.

I did not respond yet. I can email and ask about the panel. I'm happy to email with that question.....I can say that you previously invited him to serve on the panel but because we had not heard from him we did not include his name.....?
